WEDNESDAY MORNING, AUGUST 10, 1859.

THE DRILL OF THE FRENCH SOLDIER. Mr. John MacMullen relates in the New York Evening Post, some things which he saw in Paris, in relation to the drill of the French soldier:

Each individual of this mass (the conscription) is taught to walk, to stand, to run, to jump, to swim, to climb, to handle the small sword and the broadsword, to manage the musket and the bayonet, with such skill as not only to slay his enemy far off or near at hand, but to protect himself against more numerous bayonets, or against the long sword of the trooper, or even the far-reaching and more formidable

Paris is the centre of this system, and having one day obtained the necessary permit, I had an opportunity of seeing how sedulously this training is attended to. There were not more than half a dozen soldiers exercised at this time, but it must be remembered that those who show most fitness for the task are chosen and drilled most thoroughly, so that in their turn they may become teachers in their several regiments.

After some of the more ordinary gymnastic feats, three men were placed in front of an end wall, against which were three platforms, rising one above the other to the roof. Each of the upper platforms was smaller than the one below it by about eighteen inches, enough to make comfortable standing room for a man. Each platform had three equal faces, forming a half hexagon, and just under the edge of each face of each of the platforms was firmly fastened a round iron bar, so that if a man were not tall enough to jump and catch the edge of the platform he might eatch the bar below. I forgot to mention that each platform was about seven feet high, and, besides being fastened to the wall, was supported by wood work below, but so far from the edge as not to interfere with the men.

Three soldiers were placed in front of these platforms standing on the ground, and each opposite one of the faces. The moment the word of command was given each man jumped at the edge of the first platform; caught it; raised himself up so as to turn one elbow, and so get on the top; jumped in like man-ner at the second platform, and got on it, and then upon the third. All this was done soquickly, in fact with such startling rapidity, that I can readily understand the confusion of the Austrians at the startling movements of the French soldiers. It seemed but an instant before the same three soldiers who had been standing motionless upon the ground in front of the platform were standing just as motionless upon the highest platform, waiting for the next command .-At the word they descended in the same way, and stood once more upon the ground. In a vard attached to the gymnasium I noticed a jumping ditch, some two feet deep and about four feet wide at one end, spread ing out to about nine feet at the other. It was about ten feet long, so that the widening was sufficiently gradual.

Here was also a strong plank fence, with a roof on top, forming a sort of shed, with the back toward you, and about fifteen feet high. The roof did not lap over the fence, but was securely fastened to it, as was also a strong iron rod running along the fence at its junction with the roof. Slats of inch plank were nailed on this fence, about three inches apart. and the whole fence sloped out from the bottom to the top, so that when a man caugh hold of the slats with his fingers his feet would swing clear, and he could thus get no assistance from them in climbing.

The same three soldiers who had scaled the platforms were placed in front of this fence. At the word of command each jumped at it with fingers hooked like claws, and, having erop to which that article is applied, and will surclawed their way up quickly to the top. led themselves up in a most curious way, turning a back somerset and lying at length on their backs upon the roof, with their arms against their sides. At the next command they stretched out their arms, caught hold of the bar, threw up their legs so as to turn a reverse somerset, and so clawed their way

Besides this they are taught to perform all their evolutions on a run; a style which has been adopted at West Point. They are taught to swim holding the musket and the cartridge-box above the water; to jump from a height upon a ledge where there is barely standing room, with their muskets in their hands and all their accoutrements upon their backs: to walk in the same way along beams both sonare and round, or along the irregularly shaped trunks of trees across ditches or ravines; each man is taught to use his musket and bayonet as a vaulting pole; and to climb upon his comrade's shoulders so as to scale a wall twenty-five feet in height.

In the recent accounts of the Zouaves we are told that they also employ in battle, la Savate, or the art of kicking. Having often heard of this, I one day asked our teacher in the gymnasium at Paris, if he knew it.

"Oh! yes." "Well, give us a specimen of it."

"Very well, place yourself in position as a boxer."

I did so, and be advanced towards me with his hands a little out from his sides, like a wrestler ready to take hold in any way.

"Now I can kick you on your forward leg, and break the bone or hurt you. While you are disturbed by that, or in case you draw it back. I can raise my foot to your stomach

"Well, suppose you should kick at my chin, I would catch your foot. Then what would you do?" "Well, try it."

He kicked and I caught his foot, but while I held it firmly he turned, threw both hands on the ground to support his body, and instantaneously brought his other foot so near my nose that I let goof his foot in a mo-

"That is very clever. Is there any parry to that?"

"Oh, yes. It is very simple. You do what I did, and I'll show you."

I kicked; he caught my foot; I turned, threw myself on my hands, and thought of course to kick him with my other foot; but he simply put one foot against the thigh of my other leg, and I was powerless. There was in his movements also this same startling rapidity. The kicks were like flashes of lightning, and the hands constantly ready for a grapple or a blow. From what I saw I have a most respectful dislike to la Savate, or, as we would say in English, theOld Shoe.

HAVE engaged in the Manipulation of GU HAVE engaged in the Manipulation the Far-ANOS, and am now ready to supply the Farmers and Planters of the United States with an article which I consider superior to anything of the kind which has yet been produced, having an unusual amount I believe, of the valuable ingredients in this article. During my editorship of the "American Farmer," with which until within a few months, I have been connected for 25 years, I have most emphatically urged upon the Farmers and Planters that the mixture of the Ammoniacal Gu-ano (Peruvian) with the Phosphatic (Mexican, Columbian, &c.,) was the best and cheapest application to most crops they could apply. For more general views upon this subject, I refer to the pages of the American Farmer; and also, to my cir cular just issued (and which will be forwarded to desiring it) in which this view is ably sustained by Dr. Bickell, Analytical Chemist, of this
